

When entering the Blackfeet Nation from any of the four directions, you will notice the colorful welcome signs along with a statue of two warriors on horseback.

The first entrance sign was completed in October of 1999. The bases of these signs are built with recycled sandstone blocks from the buildings at Two Medicine Catholic Mission, built in the late 1800s. The horses and riders were constructed of old cars which were destroyed in the flood of June 8, 1964.

The Blackfeet Trail

The original scenic "Blackfeet Trail Tour", defined by it's historic roadside markers, was laid out as a cooperative community effort by the Museum of the Plains Indian and the Browning Lions Club. The signs have been recently updated by the Blackfeet Planning and Development Department.

The original tour, sites 1–15 on the map, is a 70 mile drive by private auto on mostly paved roads.

This particular route was chosen because its successive sites reflect the rich and varied history of the Blackfeet people. The trail provides an opportunity to view the Great Plains as they existed in former days.

This particular part of the reservation is one of the last surviving regions where one can imaginatively recreate the West of a century and more ago. Here, one can view in the mind's eye the immense herds of buffalo, the ocean of grass, the endless vistas of foothills and coulees, the tree bordered streams, the Indian Camps, Sun Dances, and buffalo drives.

It was in this country, Blackfeet Country, that the Blackfeet truly felt at home. They ~ and those who came later, adapted themselves and the patterns of life to this vast region of sky and prairie. It is hoped that the modern traveler will experience some of the rich history and culture of the people while following the "Blackfeet Trail."
