The Rasmuson Wildlife Conservation Center

at the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Ranch

THEODORE ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL RANCH

The 5,500 sq. ft. Center can sleep 32 guests in six bedrooms, feed 60 people from the commercial kitchen and seat up to 104 in the main conference/dining room. The facility also includes a lab-style classroom setup for 30 students to work on field related activities. The remaining square footage includes an office, public restrooms with shower facilities, utility room with a washer and dryer, dining area, great room, and an outdoor deck surrounding the West end of the conference room with a gorgeous view of the mountains and rolling hills. The Center is also equipped with a wireless high speed internet connection accessible from anywhere throughout the facility as well as a guest telephone, AV system, projector and screen.

The Center is an effective facility for short courses, workshops, seminars and demonstrations about integrated natural resource management, conservation education, and related topics, not to mention it's somewhat isolated atmosphere promotes a great opportunity for groups to focus on teambuilding and develop a comradery found nowhere else. The Ranch is located 10 miles west of Dupuyer, Montana, about 2 hours from Great Falls International Airport.

Located in the heart of the Ranch is a Watchable Wildlife Trail about $\frac{3}{4}$ mile in length (1.5 miles total), which provides a great view of "where the horizontal grasslands and vertical limestone cliffs collide." From atop one of the tallest points on the Ranch you will likely spot some critters and take in a vast glance of what this wonderful landscape has to offer. The ranch property borders U.S. Forest Service lands and is only 3 miles from the Bob Marshall Wilderness boundary. Dupuyer Creek and its tributaries also converge on the ranch and offer great fly-fishing opportunities for those interested anglers.

The only distraction found on the Boone and Crockett Club's working cattle ranch is the breathtaking view of the Rocky Mountain Front.

The Center was constructed to blend into the surrounding landscape, taking advantage of the mountainous and big sky vistas. The building was also designed with a high-efficiency rating due to the strong winds and winter weather.
